EDITORIAL

All change

The eagle-eyed among you will have noticed that I was wearing a wedding ring last month (no letters from disappointed readers so far...). That change is quickly followed by another one – this is my last editorial.

I'm off to work on the Which? websites – look out for the redesign this summer. So you'll be seeing Neil Fowler's picture here next month – and then watch out for a change to the magazine itself in May.

But back to this issue. I'm sitting in this car as part of our unique research into car safety (p10). As well as crash test results from EuroNCAP, we give our own exclusive assessment of safety, taking account of other types of accidents, such as rear-end shunts. You won't find this information anywhere else (except on our websites of course – see p27 for how you can log on).

Working on this issue (now I'm back from honeymoon) has been as interesting as the previous 24 that I edited. I hope you've enjoyed them – and that you will also enjoy the changes that are on their way.
